Dear Anthony,

I am writing to you directly as the Chief Executive of Granthorne, knowing that this is unusual. I apologise in advance if any of the following lands harder than I would like it to. I have tried to redraft this email three times today, and I would rather you hear from me clearly than not at all.

You will be aware that I have been made redundant. I have today lodged my formal appeal with HR and copied Karen in on this email. I am writing to you in addition to that, because I do not believe that what has happened can be addressed by another internal panel chaired by another member of the Executive.

I joined Granthorne three years ago, took on Network South 14 months later, and have driven that region through a full route restructure, taken our SLA from 89.3% to 96.4%, and managed three consecutive peak periods without losing a single client. We came in 4% under cost-to-serve plan in FY24/25 and on plan in FY25/26 to date. None of that has been recognised, weighed or even mentioned in this process. I am the only person in a leadership cohort of four who has been made redundant. The two next-closest comparators have less than 18 months in the function between them.

I will say what I think is going on. This company is rotten from the top down and I have never been treated with such contempt. I have been passed over for promotion twice in favour of materially less experienced male colleagues, made the subject of a grievance investigation which I do not believe was carried out in good faith, and now made redundant alone, in a team of nine, two weeks after a not-upheld grievance about my line manager. The proximity of these events is not, in my view, a coincidence. I find it very difficult to read it as anything other than victimisation under the Equality Act.

I want to be transparent with you about two further things, because I do not want any of this to come out sideways at a later stage:

1. I have kept detailed contemporaneous notes of every interaction I have had with Daniel Morley over the past 14 months. The relevant entries are referenced in my grievance and I am willing to disclose them in full to any decision-maker that is genuinely independent.
2. I also have audio recordings of three of my one-to-ones with Daniel. I made those recordings on my phone without telling him in advance. I did that because I wanted to protect myself from what I had come to expect would be a cycle of denial. I appreciate this is awkward under clause 16 of my contract and the Recording Policy in the Handbook. I am raising it with you now rather than later because I am not prepared to play any of this dishonestly.

What I am asking for is straightforward. I would like an opportunity to meet with you, in person and outside the formal HR process, for one hour. If after that conversation you still want to proceed on the basis of the redundancy decision, then I will of course exhaust the appeal and consider my options externally. If, however, we can find a way to part ways properly, with the recognition and support that I think the last three years deserve, I would very much rather that than the alternative.

I have been a loyal employee. I am asking you, as the person who originally hired me into the company, to give me one hour.

Yours,
Leah
